"Sorcery and witchcraft seem to be almost negligible as causes of disease. I never heard of a single instance in which individuals were accused of employing such methods to injure fellow tribesmen. I was told, however, that threats of sorcery are not unknown as a means of keeping people in line. If a man has an enemy who has been causing him trouble, for instance, he may say to him, 'Watch out, or I will take you with me when I die.' But such admonitions are rarely used, however effective they may be as a means of deterring people from harming others."
